Forword: Money and Pension's Service Financial Wellbeing Guide

Dame Rachel de Souza DBE, Children's Commissioner for England

As Children's Commissioner for England, I am dedicated to advocating for the needs of the most vulnerable children and young people in the country. All children deserve loving and long-lasting relationships, which provide them with the emotional and practical support that sets them up for life. Children in challenging situations, such as those at risk of homelessness or living away from their birth parents in care, rely on the state to act as their corporate parents and to help them develop relationships and access practical support to help them navigate life. It is therefore vital that corporate parents are able to provide reliable and relevant advice. That is why I am delighted to write a foreword to this Money and Pensions Service's financial wellbeing guide.

Through the independent advice and advocacy service 'Help at Hand' that my team runs, I have seen how crucial it is that children in vulnerable circumstances have access to information and resources about managing their money. This guide is a welcome step towards embedding practical and relevant support for vulnerable children. I believe it will strengthen the support that practitioners are already providing, ultimately ensuring that young people enter adulthood with the knowledge and skills they need to thrive.

With the rise in cost-of-living and impact of the of Covid-19 pandemic disproportionately affecting vulnerable young people transitioning into adulthood, there has never been a more important time to bolster the practical support provided to them. I hope this guide will serve as a valuable resource to local authorities and practitioners supporting children and young people on a daily basis.

Introduction

Who is this guidance for?

- anyone leading services for children and young people in vulnerable circumstances, including Directors of Children's Services, Lead Members for Children's Services and Corporate Parents.
- managers of practitioners delivering services for children and young people in vulnerable circumstances, particularly members of Youth Services, Leaving Care and Looked After Children teams, or Early Help teams and School Head Teachers.

This guidance is primarily for leaders and managers but may also be useful for practitioners. The accompanying toolkit is for service providers and practitioners working in the community and directly with young people. It is designed to help them find opportunities to talk about money alongside the support they are already providing to children and young people and their families.

This guide aims to help leaders of children and young people's services find ways to strengthen the money skills, knowledge and habits of the children and young people they support. This might be through having conversations about money as part of the support you already provide, offering financial capability skills sessions, assisting young people to access money guidance<sup>1</sup>, or helping parents and carers think about their role in influencing their children about money.

We recognise that the age of the children and young people being supported by Local Authority services will vary. For the purposes of this guide we define children and young people as those up to the age of 25.

This guidance is not necessarily asking you or your teams to implement or fund new initiatives or become an expert in financial wellbeing. Instead, it aims to help you provide support for your frontline teams to:

- understand the benefits of financial wellbeing for children and young people and their families, and its connection to current policy priorities.
- find opportunities to integrate financial awareness into their work and the services they provide, or to expand and enhance existing financial capability provision.
- find further advice, resources and tools to help them deliver effective opportunities for the children and young people in their area to learn about money.

The skills, knowledge, attitudes and behaviours that help people to manage money and achieve good financial wellbeing begin to develop from an early age. Those supporting children and young people – including parents, schools and children and young people's services – can all play a part in helping them to develop the skills and knowledge they need for greater financial wellbeing in later life. Giving children and young people the skills and confidence to manage their money now and in the future will help promote their physical and mental health<sup>2</sup> and empower them to make the most of future educational and employment opportunities.

It is particularly important that children and young people growing up in vulnerable circumstances have opportunities to talk about money, gain money skills throughout childhood, and access quality money guidance as they become more independent. For example, children and young people who are care-experienced, those who have caring responsibilities or young people growing up in low-income households may be exposed to greater financial challenges at an earlier age and need extra support to build financial wellbeing and resilience.

1 Guidance is an impartial service which will help you to identify your options and narrow down your choices but will not tell you what to do or which product to buy; the decision is yours. It is different from financial advice or debt advice, which only firms that are regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA) can offer, and will recommend a specific product or course of action for you to take given your circumstances and financial goals. ## About the Money and Pensions Service

The Money and Pensions Service (MaPS) is an arm's-length body of the UK Government, sponsored by the Department for Work and Pensions. We help people – particularly those most in need – to improve their financial wellbeing and build a better, more confident future. We work to ensure people can access high quality money and pensions guidance and debt advice, and to improve the provision of financial education for children and young people at home, at school and in the community.

MoneyHelper

You can also access a series of 'talking about money' guides tailored to different age groups, and specific resources that outline the financial support available for young carers. You can order physical copies of our guides, for individuals or for not-for-profit and public sector organisations to use, through our guide ordering portal here.

MoneyHelper has published new financial guidance for 16–24-year-olds: available here. This guidance introduces a range of money or pensions topics typical to all young adults when they start making independent financial decisions after leaving education and entering the labour market (including while job seeking or on an apprenticeship). It then signposts to more detailed MoneyHelper guidance or directly to external sources of support. Guidance for students and graduates can also be found here.

In January 2020, MaPS published the UK Strategy for Financial Wellbeing which aims to drive significant, coordinated change to the financial wellbeing of the UK. The strategy outlines a goal of 800,000 more children and young people receiving a meaningful financial education in England by 2030. This goal is supported by the Delivery Plan for England, which includes supporting children and young people who are most in need.

To make sure we reflect the needs of children and young people who are most in need, we have consulted:

- Local Authority managers and practitioners,
- third sector providers working with children and young people in the community (including specific vulnerable groups of children), and
- relevant national agencies.

Acknowledgments

The Money and Pensions Service (MaPS) would like to thank the children and young people's services leaders, managers and practitioners who took part in interviews and focus groups to inform the development of the guides. In addition, MaPS offers its thanks to the following people and organisations, whose views and advice have been invaluable in the writing of this guidance: Department for Work and Pensions; Department for Education; Department for Levelling Up Housing and Communities; Department for Culture, Media and Sport; Her Majesty's Treasury; Youth Justice Board; Local Government Association; Children's Commissioner for England; Royal Borough of Greenwich; London Borough of Barnet; Adur & Worthing Councils; Convention of Scottish Local Authorities (COSLA); Scottish Government; Welsh Government; Children's Commissioner for Wales; Children in Wales; Young Scot; Young Enterprise; Money Advice Scotland; Young Money; MyBnk; The Money Charity; The Share Foundation; The Mix; Barclays; Natwest; HSBC; Lloyds Banking Academy; The Family Building Society; Academy of Money; Mental Health and Money Advice; Open Palm; The Prince's Trust; Experian; Debt Advice Foundation; Office for Students; SFE for Practitioners; Council for Curriculums, Examination and Assessment (CCEA).

What is financial wellbeing?

Defining financial wellbeing

Financial wellbeing is known by different names. It is sometimes described as financial literacy, financial wellness, financial confidence or capability, or financial resilience.

MaPS defines financial wellbeing in the following way:

Financial wellbeing is about feeling secure and in control. It is about making the most of your money day to day, dealing with the unexpected, and being on track for a healthy financial future. In short: financially resilient, confident and empowered.<sup>3</sup>

Why financial wellbeing matters to the children and young people you support

Experiences of money in childhood and as young adults can have an impact on financial wellbeing and resilience now and into adulthood. It is vital that all children and young people have opportunities to gain positive money skills, knowledge and habits in a range of settings, through formal and informal financial education and money guidance.

Since 2014, formal financial education has been a statutory part of the secondary school curriculum,<sup>4</sup> but we know this is not sufficient to reach all young people. Young people in vulnerable circumstances may miss out on formal education and need more tailored support delivered outside of the school environment. This is where Local Authorities have an important role to play: reaching children and young people at other key moments in their journeys to financial independence. In England, just 47% of children and young people are receiving key elements of financial education at school or at home – the lowest in the UK.

Some experiences and contexts in childhood are predictors of poorer financial outcomes, including those of children and young people often already accessing the services provided by a Local Authority. For example, children and young people growing up in care, being a care leaver, having caring responsibilities, as well as growing up in an over-indebted household, or having a long-term illness, impairment or disability.<sup>5</sup>

These children and young people may:

- be at risk of having lower levels of financial capability, which could lead to poor outcomes or financial exploitation.
- be making money decisions at an earlier age than their peers, due to their circumstances.
- face challenges associated with lower levels of financial capability, for example having lower literacy or numeracy skills.
- be living in homes where they are not receiving constructive financial influences and learning what they need.<sup>6</sup>

Many of these children and young people would benefit from targeted help beyond the financial education they receive in school or at home, tailored to their circumstances.

"The young people [we work with] may not have had any or possibly unhelpful information from family or parents. If they have had no information or learning around the subject, they may look to places where information is not safe, i.e., get-rich-quick schemes or scams."

The economic impact of the Covid-19 pandemic and the subsequent cost of living crisis have exacerbated financial stress for many people in England and across the UK. Young people are experiencing disrupted education, loss of earnings, reduced access to work experience and barriers to affordable housing:

- The number of people aged 18-24 claiming unemployment related benefits more than doubled from March to May 2020, at the start of the pandemic.<sup>7</sup>
- 51% of those aged 18-24 have reported feeling that they have made a poor decision about debt during the pandemic.<sup>8</sup>
- 37% of young people said that they were worried about having enough money to live on during lockdown, suggesting strong links between the mental health of young people and their understanding of money.<sup>9</sup>

Raising the financial wellbeing and capability of children and young people has never been more important to improving their future economic and educational success. The services you lead have a vital part to play in supporting those most in need gain financial confidence and resilience.

"I have found that many of the young people we are working with don't understand money and how it is connected to everything, especially when living independently. It is easy to fall into debt, unmanageable debt, without having financial awareness."

Why financial wellbeing matters to Local Authorities and children and young people's services

We know that many practitioners are already giving young people some support with money matters, and that many want help and support to do so. Everyone involved in supporting a young person has a role to play in promoting their financial wellbeing.

Through your role in children and young people's services, you and your teams are uniquely placed to support children's financial wellbeing through a wide range of services and with local partners. Improving children and young people's financial capability is likely to have a positive impact on many of your broader initiatives and priorities, for example, supporting care-experienced young people to gain the life skills they need to thrive as they become independent; helping disabled young people access education and employment support; and ensuring young people moving into independence are able to manage a budget and maintain their tenancies.

Promoting children and young people's financial wellbeing can contribute to achieving many of the key priorities for children's services and social work teams, including requirements set out under the Children Act 2004, Homelessness Order 2002 and Children and Social Work Act 2017, such as:

- ensuring the young person is safe from harm,
- focusing on the health, wellbeing, emotional and physical development of the child or young person (sometimes in the Local Authority's role as 'corporate parent'),
- preparing young people (especially those who are care-experienced) for independent living,
- homelessness prevention, and
- skills development and employability.

"Financial awareness plays a huge part when working on homelessness prevention. Many young people lack the skills to effectively manage their money and prioritise things which should not be prioritised when trying to maintain a tenancy. This can lead to housing-related debt and homelessness."

Youth worker

Developing good money skills is a vital part of living independently and achieving financial wellbeing – an important factor in supporting children and young people's mental health now and in the future. 17% of 16- and 17-year-olds report feeling anxious when thinking about their money, and this figure rises to 50% of 18- to 24-year-olds.<sup>10</sup>

Local Authority spotlight: Adur & Worthing Councils

Adur & Worthing Councils, working in partnership with DWP, set up a Youth Hub to support young people aged 16-24 access training, apprenticeship and employment opportunities. They recognised that offering financial capability to the young people using the hub would improve basic financial capability and help to prevent negative effects on mental health. The content was delivered by MyBnk, a charity offering financial education workshops, in a way that made it relevant to the everyday experiences of young people.

Evidence shows that children who needed a social worker in the year they take GCSEs are half as likely to achieve a strong pass in English and Maths than those who did not, and that low literacy and numeracy are linked to lower levels of financial capability.<sup>11</sup> Poor educational outcomes persist even after social work involvement ends, resulting in poorer lifetime outcomes. This shows that Local Authorities need to make up for the educational barriers and gaps experienced by the young people they support.

The Department for Education's social mobility strategy, Unlocking Talent, Fulfilling Potential, highlights the vital role that partnership working and sharing best practice across schools, Local Authorities, practitioners and wider family has in improving outcomes for children and young people. Identifying opportunity areas across England has led to improved quality of careers advice, other skills for employment, and opportunities to develop confidence, leadership and resilience. For Local Authorities in these areas (and in the Education Investment Areas announced in the Levelling Up white paper<sup>12</sup>) there is a real opportunity to use conversations about money to help close the widening gap caused by the pandemic, increase financial wellbeing and, eventually, improve wider outcomes.<sup>13</sup>

We know that as well as having a significant positive impact on individuals and families, improvements in financial wellbeing will be beneficial for wider society. Improved financial wellbeing can lead to a reduction in debt and homelessness, in turn leading to less pressure on services.<sup>14</sup>

Making a difference to the children and young people you support

Embedding financial wellbeing into the services you deliver to children and young people could make a huge difference to their financial resilience and confidence. Whether it is skilling up practitioners to have informal conversations about money, delivering money skills development sessions or helping young people access resources and guidance themselves, a coherent approach across your services will help ensure children and young people are in a stronger position to make sound money choices and avoid harmful debt and financial exploitation.

A multi-agency approach combining, for example, social work teams, early help, youth justice services, and not in education, employment or training (NEET) outreach, as well as schools and voluntary and community sector organisations, could ensure conversations about money are introduced when they are most needed. The accompanying toolkit contains tips for working with other agencies and service providers.

This section highlights some of the groups of young people you and your teams may support, and the factors that could affect their financial wellbeing. It includes some suggestions for ways that your services may be able to help build financial awareness and money skills.

Children in need and care-experienced young people

Children in care and care leavers are more likely than their peers to have experiences and characteristics associated with a higher risk of poor financial capability.<sup>15</sup> These can include lower educational outcomes (as a result of significantly disrupted school life); homelessness; having a longstanding illness or disability; having parents with no or low levels of qualifications; growing up in a low-income or over-indebted home; or having parents with low financial capability themselves.

One of the key findings of the Ofsted research report Ready or not: Care leavers' views of preparing to leave care, is that 'many care leavers felt unprepared to manage money...When they were asked what made them feel unsafe when they first left care, being worried about money was the most common reason reported'.<sup>16</sup>

"I had little help in learning the financial side of things: I am in years of debt with council tax and water rates due to this."

Care leaver (Ofsted, 2022)

The UK All Party Parliamentary Group (APPG) on Financial Education for Young People makes clear that there is 'no one silver bullet' when preparing children in care for financial stability, and identified that a number of key stakeholders contribute to raising financial awareness. 62% of care leavers aged 16-32 felt that their personal advisors were helpful, but the APPG found that personal advisors often felt that they did not have access to adequate training on money management skills. The toolkit that accompanies this guidance provides resources to support Local Authority practitioners (including personal advisors) to have discussions about finance with young people.

Supporting care-experienced young people with their financial capability and wellbeing aligns with the seven fundamental needs set out in the Children and Social Work Act 2017, collectively known as the Corporate Parenting Principles. These include:

- to act in the best interest and promote the physical and mental health and wellbeing of children and young people.
- to promote high aspirations and seek to secure the best outcomes for children and young people.
- to prepare those children and young people for adulthood and independent living.

Care-experienced young people often become financially independent earlier than a young person living at home, and might need additional support to help manage grants, understand how to budget, and learn how to meet financial obligations and priorities at a younger age. They are also less likely to have a financial safety net of parents or family that many other young people benefit from, subsequently putting them at an increased risk of homelessness.

Local Authority appointed personal advisors and bespoke pathway plans should be utilised to build solid financial foundations that will make a significant difference to the lives of care-experienced young people. Recognising that money skills and habits start to form at a young age, work should begin as soon as possible, and form part of Care Plan reviews, to open up conversations about finances and give children and young people in care the opportunity to improve their confidence managing money.

Child Trust Funds and Junior ISAs

Child Trust Funds (CTFs)

were first introduced by the UK Government in 2005 for children who were born between 1 September 2002 and 2 January 2011. When CTFs became available, HMRC sent the parents or guardians of qualifying children a starting payment voucher of £250 (or £500 if you were on a low income). This voucher could then be used to set up a Child Trust Fund account in the child's name. If you didn't use the voucher within one year, HMRC would set up a Child Trust Fund account in your child's name on your behalf. The first CTFs started to mature in September 2020, when the oldest account holders turned 18.

In addition to finding support and information on the MoneyHelper website, The Share Foundation can help. It has a statutory role in operating Junior ISA and CTFs for care-experienced children and young people, and its remit includes providing financial awareness programmes for these children and young people up to the age of 25.

The Share Foundation has found that incentivised learning (whereby children and young people can earn money by completing stages of the programme) is particularly effective for helping 15–17-year-olds in care to become engaged with the journey of building confidence in financial awareness, and includes this in its Stepladder Plus programme. (Note that the Stepladder Plus programme is not available across the whole of the UK and is not free to Local Authorities.)

Local Authority spotlight: London Borough of Barnet

The Share Foundation, working in partnership with the London Borough of Barnet, delivered the Stepladder Plus incentivised learning financial education programme for care-experienced young people:

"The benefits of Stepladder Plus for the young people are extensive. The money earned by the young people at the end of the programme will go a huge way in helping them have a secure transition into independent living. On top of this the modules related to financial and future planning give the young people a solid foundation on which to build on in their independent living. The programme also builds the confidence for those young people who have maybe found education difficult. Achieving one module and earning the associated money can have a huge positive effect on young people who have often shied away from engaging with opportunities due to fear of failure. I would highly recommend this programme for all Looked-After Children whether they are in education or NEET."

Caseworker, Barnet Education and Learning Service

It's important that adult care leavers are made aware of the Junior ISAs or CTFs which have been built up for them, and how organisations can help with the claiming process. They should also be aware of the wide variation in the valuation of these accounts, as a result of changing levels of UK Government grant funding over the years and the differing contribution policies of Local Authorities. This graph highlights the average account values by age:

Average account value by age

It is particularly important to ensure that young adults from low-income families born in the UK from 1 September 2002 are aware of their matured CTF. A survey undertaken by The Share Foundation indicates that 85% of such accounts are either 'Addressee Gone Away' or were never registered having been opened by HMRC on their behalf, and CTF account providers confirm this high level of unclaimed accounts, which are typically worth over £1,500 for an 18–19-year-old in 2022. The Share Foundation's search facility can be found here and the webpage contains materials needed for running local events.

Local Authority spotlight: Royal Borough of Greenwich

Royal Borough of Greenwich's Housing Inclusion Pathway Manager says, "Preventing youth homelessness and improving outcomes for young people are priorities for Royal Borough of Greenwich. As such, we provide quality financial support and independent living skills to help young people make informed choices about their future. Working in partnership with MyBnk's 'The Money House' we deliver a financial confidence programme to young people aged 16-24, teaching them how to manage their finances and other elements of their tenancy and avoid eviction.

"Financial education matters to our young people. Building it into the support we offer ensures they gain the practical skills needed to make informed choices about their future, and successfully manage independent living. Each young person has their own level of financial awareness and skills, so we aim to provide the support they need to develop and maximise their individual skills to help them make the most of their money and navigate the financial maze that comes with independent living. Our young people who have attended the Money House programme have increased confidence in managing their money including paying essential bills on time, and are less likely to have unsustainable arrears."

Children and young people living with additional learning needs and disabilities

Children and young people affected by disability – either because they are disabled themselves or living with a disabled parent or carer – are often in need of additional support to increase their financial capability.

Around two million (43%) of the UK's 4.5 million children living in poverty are in a family where someone is disabled.<sup>18</sup> Research shows that the cost of living is on average £583 a month more for a disabled person, and families of disabled children face extra costs of £531 a month on average.<sup>19</sup> These unique contexts demonstrate the need for targeted support that helps individuals identify gaps in their knowledge and build their financial capability into adulthood.

Children with special or additional learning needs are among the most vulnerable in the school system. Any tailored support they receive from Local Authority practitioners outside the school environment has the potential to impact their wellbeing, attainment, employment opportunities and long-term life prospects, all of which are underpinned by financial capability and wellbeing.<sup>20</sup>

Your teams will already be providing support under the 'local offer' all Local Authorities are required to publish, to outline services for children and young people with additional needs.<sup>21</sup> Considering how this offer can embed financial awareness will help these young people build valuable skills for the transition to adulthood.

It's also important that practitioners consider where they may be supporting some young people who lack the capacity to manage their finances alone, even with additional support to build on their skills, knowledge and awareness. If this is the case, practitioners can find more information and help on this topic on the MaPS MoneyHelper website.<sup>22</sup>

Young carers<sup>23</sup>

The Carers Trust believes there are as many as 700,000 children and young people caring for family members in the UK.<sup>24</sup> Many young carers have more advanced money skills, knowledge and capability than their peers, because they have been required to take on financial responsibilities in their caring role. They may need support to apply for benefits such as Carer's Allowance and Carer Premium and to manage household budgeting.

Young carers are likely to have significant absence from school, and are therefore more likely to achieve lower educational attainment and employment outcomes. In addition, those unable to access adequate practical and financial support are likely to experience isolation and stress.<sup>25</sup>

"It's about trying to make young people have the same experience they would if they were at home, planning a meal or doing things that are naturally part of their day. Not feeling like we are bringing a young person into a room, sitting them down and saying, 'We're going to talk to you about managing money' – because we know that young people don't engage in that way."

Social work leader

Your teams will already be supporting many young carers through a range of services. Initiating conversations about financial wellbeing and maximising opportunities for young carers to gain new skills and access money guidance could have a positive impact on their day-to-day lives and their futures, while supporting your Local Authority to meet its responsibilities under the Care Act 2014.

Children living in low-income families

"Many of our young people have limited or no experience of managing money themselves. Many young people are required to claim benefits and find the system both complex and traumatising, requiring intensive support to make and maintain claims as well as practical support around how to manage on a very low income."

Leader at a charity supporting children and young people

Children and young people growing up in low-income or over-indebted households, and those living in the social rental sector, are less likely than their peers to develop good financial capability.<sup>26</sup> Children in low-income households across the UK are slightly more likely to feel they are unable to make a difference to their money situation (24%) than those in high-income households (19%), and just 64% of parents in low-income households feel able to be a good role model compared to 84% in high-income families.<sup>27</sup>

Many of the factors contributing to a family's financial disadvantage may be beyond their control but supporting children in these circumstances to learn to manage money can play a part in strategies to tackle poverty and disadvantage in the longer term.

Initiatives aimed at providing support to families in this situation offer an opportunity to improve financial awareness among children and young people alongside their parents and carers. The Department for Levelling Up Housing and Communities (DLUHC)'s Supporting Families initiative, for example, provides an opportunity to embed a whole-family and multi-agency approach to support those experiencing multiple disadvantages such as worklessness, domestic abuse, poor mental health and poor financial wellbeing. One of the headline indicators on the Supporting Families Outcomes Framework is 'Financial stability'. The family needs which fall under this include: an adult in the family being workless, a family requiring support with their finances and/or having unmanageable debt, and a young person being NEET. Lead practitioners work closely with families experiencing these problems to improve their financial outcomes. As a result of this work, Local Authorities have been encouraged to recognise the value of financial wellbeing forming part of similar interventions.<sup>28</sup> This could include work to help families develop money skills together.

Young people involved in the youth justice system

Evidence shows there is a link between money and the factors that contribute to offending behaviour, and between crime in young people and later financial problems.<sup>29</sup> Young people in contact with the criminal justice system are likely to have missed significant amounts of time in school, which could impact their educational attainment. It is estimated that between 37% and 50% of the children in custody are care-experienced<sup>30</sup> and are likely to face many of the same barriers and challenges outlined above.

The CAPRICORN framework<sup>31</sup>, developed by Public Health England, provides a system-wide approach to help Local Authorities prevent young offending and re-offending, outlining clear actions for collaborative working across organisations and teams. It addresses root causes across communities such as reducing sources of stress, strengthening core life skills, reducing poverty, and prioritising children in need and looked-after children. Building conversations about financial resilience, wellbeing and aspirations into prevention interventions could improve wider outcomes, and can be achieved through the partnership approach central to CAPRICORN. The accompanying toolkit signposts to many resources and organisations that can support such an approach.

Helping your teams to develop money guidance skills

You can find out more information on how to develop practitioners' skills in having these money conversations with children and young people by utilising the MaPS Money Guiders programme and Competency Framework:

Money Guiders programme and Competency Framework

The Money Guiders programme has been created for anyone who provides non-regulated money guidance to individuals or groups based in the UK, from larger organisations with national coverage through to smaller and local groups. This could include community workers, housing officers, mental health workers, volunteers, welfare officers, energy advisors and money mentors, to name a few of the many roles delivering money guidance.

Staff have access to the Money Guidance Competency Framework, which sets out what practitioners need to know in order to have those difficult conversations with service users about money, including household budgeting, borrowing and debt.

There is a practitioner community hosted in each of the four UK nations, where staff can network, support each other, and access free webinars, workshops, training and forums tailored to their needs and interests.

Programme partner organisations can also access free e-learning resources and a City & Guilds endorsed professional credential (a digital badge awarded on completion of the Foundation Level eLearning and assessment).

The programme aims to increase the profile of money guidance activity; improving financial wellbeing and money guidance practice, influencing policy and system change across the Financial Wellbeing and Money Guidance sector; strengthening and growing the community network of practitioners and stakeholders and enabling partnership working and collaboration across different organisations and sectors.

Taking action

As a leader in children and young people's services you are best placed to decide how this guidance is applied in your area, and which multi-agency practitioners are able to embed financial wellbeing as part of their day-to-day interactions with children and young people. Supported by the accompanying toolkit, here are some actions you can take to make a difference.

- Set up a multi-agency strategic working group with key representatives across your region, to evaluate key priorities for improving financial wellbeing amongst children and young people in vulnerable circumstances, and deliver on these.
- Assess your existing offer and identify the touchpoints that children and young people have with your services. Reflect on where financial capability and wellbeing are already embedded and where there is an opportunity to enhance this.
- Involve the voices of children and young people in vulnerable circumstances, and/or those of practitioners working with them, to understand the specific needs within your local area. You can also involve them in the process of designing and evaluating interventions to ensure that these meet the children and young people where they are, and are tailored to meet their needs.
- Engage with practitioners to understand what they need to improve the ways they address financial conversations with children and young people and what is already taking place. Encourage any necessary knowledge and skills development so that practitioners consider financial wellbeing as part of a 'whole family' approach.
- Establish a network of children and young people practitioners in the local community, to share best practice, find new ways of working, and offer peer support. There may be initiatives or approaches working in areas similar to yours that you can learn from.
- Strengthen the partnerships with charities and third sector organisations your Local Authority may already have, to help raise awareness of the importance of financial education and improve access to good financial knowledge and skills.
- Find ways to take into account the views, wishes and feelings of children and young people accessing your services. Understanding what they want from conversations around money and the kind of money guidance they need can help you build impactful provision.
- Get involved in MaPS' Money Guiders programme and encourage your partners to do so too. It is designed to help anyone who provides non-regulated money guidance, whatever their sector or job role.
- Share this guidance and the accompanying toolkit with colleagues, service leaders and frontline practitioners in your region and beyond.

Reflections

Use the questions below to help you and your teams and practitioners reflect on what your Local Authority offers and where there are opportunities for change.

What existing initiatives does your team deliver for children, young people and families across your Local Authority area?
How can conversations about financial wellbeing and capability be integrated into these?
Which touchpoints can be used to start having conversations about money?
Which teams/practitioners are best placed to have these conversations?
Do teams/individual practitioners need support (e.g. training, resources) to be more confident in having conversations about money with the children and young people they work with?
Are you already working with charities and third sector organisations who can help raise awareness of financial wellbeing with children and young people? Could you include financial education outcomes in the future commissioning of any services?
Would your team benefit from an allocated financial wellbeing lead – someone to drive forward priorities and help develop a multi-agency approach?
